curated by Ilaria Conti

Baruchello Foundation

October 1 – December 19, 2020

Monday through Saturday, 4 p.m. to 7 p.m.

Opening: Wednesday, September 30, 2020 from 4 p.m. to 9 p.m.

On Wednesday, September 30, from 4 p.m. to 9 p.m., the Baruchello Foundation inaugurates Prove di R(i)esistenza. The exhibition, curated by Ilaria Conti, will be on view from October 1 to December 19, 2020.

The pandemic disruptions of 2020 have made tangible the need to take care of the vital network of relationships that connects individuals, society, and ecology. Prove di R(i)esistenza presents artistic practices that, through a methodology rooted in research, processuality, participation, and collaboration, cultivate new forms of individual and shared ethical awareness.

“Resistance as re-existence” is a notion articulated by Colombian thinker Adolfo Albán Achinte to describe the series of “mechanisms that communities create to invent daily life and power while [...] confronting the hegemonic project.” Prove di R(i)esistenza responds to Achinte’s proposition by presenting projects that do not simply resist or denounce the status quo, but rather enact forms of re-existence by creatively and politically imagining new everyday forms of being and relating.

The invited artists, Laura Cionci, Danilo Correale, Salvatore Iaconesi and Oriana Persico, and takecare, have been working for years on strategies that aim to generate a collective and horizontal rethinking of key notions of our time, such as the body, labor, technology, and ecology.

By opening the exhibition path with a library as a place of ideas gathering books that are essential to the artists’ practices, the project involves the public in a series of projects that invite us to reformulate our affective, creative, and interpersonal, as well as intellectual and bodily, ways of existing: Danilo Correale’s immersive installation asks us to imagine a post-work society through hypnosis; Laura Cionci’s intimate elaborations on nature invite us to reconsider our energetic potential; Salvatore Iaconesi and Oriana Persico rethink ritually the data produced daily by digital technologies; takecare, in collaboration with the design duo PLSTCT, reflects on the relationship between body, nature, architecture, and capitalism.

During the exhibition, the artists will present workshops and conversations that seek to involve the public in the practices and research presented by the project and cultivate new forms of sociality and knowledge-sharing.

An integral part of the project is the upcoming publication of an essay by Ilaria Conti, promoted by the Baruchello Foundation, reflecting on new critical and institutional horizons in response to the international crises of 2020.

Prove di R(i)esistenza is part of the Summer Show project, which is the winner of the Public Notice Estate Romana 2020-2021-2022 and is part of ROMARAMA 2020, the cultural program promoted by Roma Capitale.

As an artistic duo, Iaconesi and Persico observe the mutations of human beings and societies that stem from the advent of networks and technologies. Between poetics and politics, bodies and architectures, squats and revolutionary business models, the couple promotes a vision of the world in which art is the glue that connects science, politics, and economics. They teach Near Future and Transmedia and Interaction Design at Istituto Superiore per le Industrie Artistiche in Florence, La Sapienza University of Rome, RUFA Rome University of Fine Arts, and Istituto Europeo di Design in Milan. They are the founders of HER (Human Ecosystems Relazioni): She Loves Data, a research center that uses art and design to create processes of cultural acceleration through data.

In collaboration with:

Daniele Bucci (Roma, 1987) is a systemic designer, researcher, and facilitator. He works on environmental and social issues by using design as a tool for reflection and cultural change. Since he co-founded Studio Superfluo in 2010, he has focused on sustainability, circular economy, and self-produced design. Through his work as a researcher and community manager, he has explored the sharing economy, the platform economy, and the implications on society and individuals of digital transformations. He has investigated issues related to civic and participatory design with CivicWise and La Scuola Open Source. He learns daily by working for HER: She Loves Data.

takecare is an independent publishing project founded in 2017 by Roberta Mansueto (Bari, 1988) that investigates the practice of writing in contemporary art, understood as care of the self. The project activates words within performance spaces and through collaborative practices (recent projects include Post Disaster Rooftops, Taranto; Random, Gagliano del Capo Lecce; and studioconcreto, Lecce). Mansueto is an independent curator who graduated in Visual Cultures and Curatorial Practices from the Academy of Fine Arts of Brera in 2015. In 2014, along with Caterina Molteni and Denise Solenghi, she opened TILE Project Space (Milan), a space for the research and promotion of young Italian artists. Since 2020, she has taken care of a community garden and residency within the Orto Fertile project (Bari), a research association that promotes the study of ethnobotany, agro-biodiversity, ecology, and eco-feminism.

In collaboration with:

PLSTCT is a duo founded in 2017 by Grazia Mappa (Grottaglie, 1988) and Gabriele Leo (Mottola, 1985). PLSTCT's research incorporates the languages of architecture, design, art, and writing in investigating the co-evolutive relationships between (human and non-human) space and body, in relation to ecology, technology, and politics. Their practice is based on a cross-disciplinary approach and seeks to question the norms and binary systems that underlie the use of space within dominant cultures. They often occupy the grey area between functional and non-functional. In 2018, they co-founded Post Disaster, a critical platform for comparison that seeks to shed light on the role of marginal territories within capital production flows on a global scale. Their work has been exhibited in independent and institutional spaces related to contemporary art and architectural research (Like A Little Disaster, Triennale Milano). They have contributed their research to several independent and academic projects, including AA School of Architecture London, the Institute of Queer Ecology, ETH Zurich's Department of Architecture, and KABUL Magazine.
